

10 Symptoms of Hurry Sickness

~ from The Ruthless Elimination of Hurry (pp. 48-51)

Check X if the symptom rings true for you...

- 1. Irritability: You get mad, frustrated, or just annoyed way too easily. Little, normal things irk you. People must tiptoe around your ongoing low-grade negativity if not anger. Word of advice from a fellow's eggshell expert: to self-diagnose don't look at how you treat a colleague or a neighbor; look at how you treat those closest to you: your spouse, children, roommate, etc.

- 2. Hypersensitivity: All it takes is a minor comment to hurt your feelings, a grumpy email to set you off, or a little turn of events to throw you into an emotional funk and ruin your day. Minor things quickly escalate to major emotional events. Depending on your personality, this might show up as anger or nitpicky-ness or anxiety or depression or just tiredness. The point is the ordinary problems of life, this side of Eden, have a disproportionate effect on your emotional well-being and relational grace. You can't seem to roll with the punches. _____
- 3. Restlessness: When you do try to slow down and rest, you can't relax. You give Sabbath a try, and you hate it. You read Scripture but find it boring. You have quiet time with God but can't focus your mind. You go to bed early but toss and turn with anxiety. You watch TV but simultaneously check your phone, fold laundry, and get into a spat on Twitter (okay, maybe you just answer your email). Your mind and body are hyped up on the drug of speed, and when they don't get the next dopamine fix, they shiver. _____
- 4. Workaholism (or just nonstop activity): You just don't know when to stop. Or worse you can't stop. Another hour, another day, another week. Your drugs of choice are accomplishment and accumulation. These could show up as careerism or just as obsessive housecleaning and errand running. Result: you fall prey to "sunset fatigue", whereby days end you have nothing left to give to your spouse, children, or loved ones. They get the grouchy, curt, overtired you, and it's not pretty. _____
- 5. Emotional numbness: You just don't have the capacity to feel another's pain. Or your own pain for that matter. Empathy is a rare feeling for you. You just don't have the time for it. You live in this kind of constant fugue. _____
- 6. Out-of-order priorities: You feel disconnected from your identity and calling. You're always getting sucked into the tyranny of the urgent, not the important. Your life is reactive, not proactive. You're busier than ever before yet still feel like you don't have time for what really matters to you. Months often go by or years—or, God forbid, maybe decades—and you realize you still haven't gotten around to all the things you said were the most important in your life.

7. Lack of care for your body: You don't have time for the basics: eight hours of sleep at night; daily exercise; healthy, home-cooked food; minimal stimulants; margin. You gain weight. Get sick multiple times a year. Regularly wake up tired. Don't sleep well. Live off the four horsemen of the industrialized food apocalypse: caffeine, sugar, processed carbs, and alcohol. _____

8. Escapist behaviors: When we're too tired to do what's actually life-giving for our souls, we each turn to our distraction of choice: overeating, overdrinking, binge-watching Netflix, browsing social media, surfing the web, looking for porn—name your preferred cultural narcotic. Narcotics are good, healthy even, on the occasional short-term basis when they shield us from unnecessary pain; but when we abuse them to escape from reality, they eat us alive. You find yourself stuck in the negative feedback loop of socially acceptable additions.

9. Slippage of spiritual disciplines: If you're anything like me when you get over busy, the things that are truly life-giving for your soul are the first to go rather than your first go-to—such as quiet time in the morning, Scripture, prayer, Sabbath, worship on Sunday, a meal with your community, and so on. Because in an ironic catch-22, the thing that makes for rest actually takes a bit of emotional energy and self-discipline. When we get over-busy, we get overtired, and when we get overtired, we don't have the energy or discipline to do what we need most for our souls. Repeat. The cycle begins to feed its own energy. So instead of life with God, we settle for life with a Netflix subscription and a glass of cheap red wine. A very poor substitute. Not because time wasted on TV is the great Satan, but we rarely get done binge-watching anything (or posting on social media, or overeating Five Guys burger and fries, etc.) and feel awake and alive from the soul outward, rested, refreshed, and ready for a new day. We delay the inevitable: an emotional crash. And consequently, we miss out on the life-giving sense of the with-ness of God. _____

10. Isolation: You feel disconnected from God, others, and your own soul. On those rare times when you actually stop to pray (and by praying I don't mean ask God for stuff; I mean sit with God in the quiet), you're so stressed and distracted that your mind can't settle down long enough to enjoy the Father's company. Same with your friends: when you're with them, you're also with your phone or a million miles away in your mind, running down the to-do list. And even when you're alone, you come face to face with the void that is your soul and immediately run back to the familiar groove of busyness and digital distraction. _____

Okay, you do the math.

How did you score? _____ Seven out of ten? Eight?
